

Abstract

This thesis is aimed at the synthesis of a combination compensator for automatic loading control of ball mills. They used a more progressive and economical method of production of enterprises that operate a ball mill, and the labor productivity is very high, and in their own way, exceeding the increase in the probability of deposits. This paper deals with the history of the ball mill, the principle of operation, and the influence of workers during its operation.