

Abstract

This diploma work addresses the issue of developing a microsatellite power supply system. The purposes and objectives of satellites in the space environment are described, as well as what role microsatellites play and for what purposes they are intended. The main types of power sources, their technical features and characteristics are shown. Calculations are made indicating the technical, economic feasibility of using the developed microsatellite power source.