

Abstract

This diploma deals with issues of scientific and technological development aimed at improving the characteristics of the resource and reliability of mechanical systems, which are one of the main instructions of scientific and technological progress. It is shown that such developments are crucial for aviation technology in connection with high flight safety requirements. Also, calculations have been made indicating the technical, economic feasibility of using the developed device to the existing design.