

Annotation

This thesis is devoted to the study of the influence of interference on the communication channel in LTE technology. The key indicators of 4G technologies, LTE network architecture, and requirements for the construction and operation of an LTE network were considered. The necessary equipment was selected. The methods of distributed signal reception are investigated. The estimation of interference influence on LTE technology by experimental means in the MatLab package is considered.