

Annotation

There is a possibility to implement a new approach to the creation of additive printing systems, in which the movement of material particles creating a printed product is controlled not by moving the print head, but by controlling electromagnetic fields. The same principle can be used to create effective systems of bacteriological protection due to the directed effect on organic impurities contained in the air.