

Abstract

This work is devoted to the study of methods that can improve the use of the time-frequency resource in telecommunication wireless mobile broadband access systems. A review of the technologies of the physical level of mobile communication systems is carried out, and spectral efficiency enhancements are considered. It is shown that the considered methods of multiple access more efficiently use the time-frequency resource in comparison with existing technologies.